

IELTS Speaking Part 2

Talk about a celebration in your country.

You should say:

- the name of the celebration
- how people celebrate it
- if it is known outside of your country and say what you like or dislike about it.

Model answer

I'm going to tell you about Oktoberfest, the renown festival of beer that, naturally, is in the month of October. The finest beermakers come there for the public to have a taste of their product. Naturally, this celebration of beer attracts many enthusiasts from all around the world. It is no surprise that many plan their trip around visiting it!

The celebration itself does not have too much variety. People go from one tent to another to taste the finest beer Bavaria has to offer. In addition to drinking, there are other activities available, such as fun rides and dancing. During the festival, they play traditional Bavarian music which really sets the mood of the celebration. It is quite popular with foreigners - as I have said, we get many folks coming over just to experience this unique atmosphere of revelry and merriment.

However, one thing I find upsetting is the culture of drinking. Here in Bavaria we nurture the idea that you drink beer to savour the taste, not to get drunk. With many festival visitors it doesn't seem to be the case. It is not rare for them to get so drunk they can barely walk. However, I tend to think it is the irresistible taste of fresh beer, so they simply can't have enough of it!

IELTS Speaking Part 3

Holidays and consumerism

Some say holidays exist to encourage people to buy presents and other things. What do you think?

I agree with this statement to some extent. As people's financial well-being grew over the years, they could afford to spend a little bit extra. The disposable income often goes to treating their nearest and dearest with presents, sometimes extravagantly expensive ones. But is it such a bad thing after all? I believe that a reasonable person will not overspend if they can't afford it - therefore, there is no need to be too concerned with the issue. The increased spending rate is an indicator of a healthy economic situation, rather than people being too eager to part with their hard-earned cash.

Are holidays more or less materialistic than they used to be?

I will probably have to count on my grandparents experience to draw parallels between nowadays and the way it was some decades ago. According to them, holidays in the past used to be more about reuniting with your friends and family. A celebration would mean getting to see your distant relatives and others of kin who you wouldn't normally meet. Today it seems more about an excuse to splash out on some trip abroad or treating yourself and your family to a nice dinner, things like that. So I guess yes, the holidays have indeed become more about consuming rather than seeing your close ones.

Holidays and celebrations

Some people stay at home for holidays, while others choose to travel. What are the advantages of each choice?

People love to say that travelling broadens your mind. I think this can be misleading - what exactly do they mean by that? If we talk about holidays, most just spend a fortnight soaking in a pool, drinking complimentary, watered-down drinks counting the days till when they have to go back to work. This isn't much different from walking around your hometown, but it sure is much more expensive. So while travelling is a nice change indeed, financially it makes more sense to stay at home since your holiday is going to be pretty much the same anyway.

Do birthdays and anniversaries lose their significance to people as they grow older?

They probably do—I mean, the novelty of birthday parties really wears off after about twenty years. Looking at older people, I can see how they definitely do not feel as excited about their upcoming birthdays. I believe that as you grow older, the day just means that you have lived one more year, while when you are young, you look forward to the awesome presents and the great party you are going to throw. With anniversaries, it might be another situation, like a marriage that has stood the test of time, which means that both spouses have made the right choice and understand the idea of commitment.

Holidays and celebrations vocabulary

Set the mood - to create a certain atmosphere.

Revelry (n) - a big, noisy celebration that usually involves consumption of alcoholic drinks.

Merriment (n) - (here) the state of being happy and drunk.

Nearest and dearest - your closest relatives.

Reunite (v) - to get back together after a long time.

Of kin - related to one another.

To splash out on smth - to spend a large sum of money.

General vocabulary

Renown (n) - fame or popularity of something or someone.

Plan around - if you plan around something, you see it as a key part of your plan. I usually plan my vacation around visiting as many museums as possible.

Have to offer - to have available.

Savour (v) - to enjoy something slowly and thoroughly.

Irresistible (adj) - difficult to refuse or turn down, tempting.

Disposable income - the amount of money you have after you have paid for essentials such as food and bills.

Draw parallels between - to compare.

Misleading (adj) - not being what it appears to be.

Complimentary (adj) - free of charge.

To stand the test of time - to keep working or existing after a lot of time has passed.